

It's Ryan "The Orchid Guy" here :-)

In yesterday's newsletter, we touched on the important question:

"How much LIGHT does your orchid need?"

...And I squeezed in a few of the critical tips on light from our book:

<http://www.OrchidsMadeEasy.com/TheBook.html>

In today's newsletter, we're going to tackle another basic orchid question you might be having, which is:

"What TEMPERATURE should you be keeping your orchid in?"

But before we go any further, let me throw out a little warning:

You'll want to read today's newsletter VERY carefully because there's a tricky thing about orchids & temperature that might catch you by surprise if you're not careful. See if you can find it :-)

Okay, now that that's out of the way, let's dive right in...

Proper temperature is EXTREMELY important for orchids, and here's why:

Orchids will ONLY bloom when they are maintained in their optimal temperature range!

(Just like eggs must be incubated within a narrow temperature range in order to hatch - it can't be too hot, or too cold! It's gotta be "just right."
:-)

So in case you were skeptical... Yes, proper temperature IS important!"

But before you start worrying too much, there's another thing you should know:

One of the very reasons why Orchids make such

FANTASTIC indoor plants is because they thrive in the very same temperature ranges we humans also find comfortable.

But that being said, maintaining the "right" temperature can still sometimes be a challenge...

Remember yesterday when we talked about orchids belonging to one of three light groups: Low Light, Medium Light, or Bright Light?

Well, when discussing temperature, we can ALSO divide orchids into three broad categories. In the case of temperature: Cool, Intermediate, & Warm.

The night-time temperatures that correspond with each of these categories are:

- Cool (45-55F/7-14C),
- Intermediate (55-60F/14-16C), and
- Warm (65F/18C or higher).

Now before we continue, did you notice something a bit "peculiar" about that last paragraph?

If not, read it again...

Did you catch it this time? Yes, that's not a typo - we ARE talking about NIGHT-time temperatures here...

And just tuck that little fact in the back of your mind for now.

I'll explain the significance of this in a future newsletter :-)

(or of course, you can learn what's the big deal about night-time temperatures right now simply by checking out our book at the link below).

<http://www.OrchidsMadeEasy.com/TheBook.html#orderform>

But in today's newsletter, we've got a lot to cover, so let's keep moving forward...

Here are some examples of orchid varieties belonging to each of the temperature categories mentioned above:

Cool orchid examples include most Cymbidiums and Dendrobiums.

Intermediate examples include Paphiopediliums and Oncidiums.

And Warm examples include Phalaenopsis and Vandas.

If you're not certain about where your particular orchid falls, be sure to consult a temperature chart (such as the one included in your copy of our book if you've ordered already) to determine the optimal temperature for your particular variety.

Now before we continue further, let's take a moment to pause.

Because by now, after reading the past three newsletters (and consulting the corresponding charts included in your book) you should have a pretty good sense of what your orchid needs when it comes to a.) Water, b.) Light, and c.) Temperature.

For example if you have a Phalaenopsis or "Moth" orchid, by now you've learned that:

- a.) It prefers continuously damp conditions
- b.) It enjoys "low light" conditions (with reference to the "shadow test" method we talked about yesterday), and...
- c.) It should be maintained in "warm" temperatures (65F/18C or higher)

So things are starting to come together, right?

Great!

Well, we've still got a few CRITICAL things to cover when it comes to temperature, but I'm going to leave that for tomorrow's newsletter, where we'll continue the discussion...

And keep your eyes glued to your email inbox, because in tomorrow's newsletter, I'm gonna share some tips that you won't want to miss...

So stay tuned! Until then...

- Ryan "The Orchid Guy" :-)

P.S. The most dramatic success stories we hear all come from people who have benefited from both the newsletter AND the additional orchid info only contained in our book...

So why not check out the book right now?

Remember, with our 6-Month, 100% Money-Back Guarantee, you've got absolutely nothing to lose.

To order your copy today risk-free, simply click on the link below:

<http://www.OrchidsMadeEasy.com/TheBook.html#orderform>

And when you order now, we'll also rush-ship $40 worth of free bonus materials along with your book!

Thanks for reading :-)

RL & Associates LLC

4500 Williams Drive
Suite #212-311
Georgetown, TX
78633
US